TEA PARTY

Everything was ready for the tea-party. Alice the Field-Mouse stepped back and surveyed her beautifully-set table with a happy smile. All the tiny cups and saucers were in place, their smooth white china faces sparkling clean. All the silverware was polished till it shone. The pink lace tablecloth lay straight and even, its carefully arranged edges stiff and starched just so.

"It really looks lovely!" Alice said to herself. "I'm sure everyone is going to have a good time!"

Brrrrring! There was the doorbell! Smoothing her skirt nervously, Alice rushed to open the door.

"H—hello! I'm so glad you could come!" she greeted Maudie Chipmunk and Mamie Squirrel who stood on the doorstep. "W—won't you come in?"

She fussed around her guests, taking their wraps, seating them in the most comfortable chairs in the parlor. Brrring! There was the doorbell again! This time it was Rosie Raccoon and Sylvia Skunk. No sooner were they inside the parlor, when the bell rang again. And for the next ten minutes Alice was kept mighty busy answering that door!

But at last all the guests were assembled, and the doorbell stopped ringing. The ladies moved into the dining room, and when they saw the beautifully-set table, there was a delighted chorus of ooh's and ah's! But no sooner had they sat down, when...

Brrrrring! There was the doorbell again. "Who, can this be?" wondered Alice as she hurried to open the door. "OH...!!"

There on the doorstep stood Ferdinand, the big gray wolf, his fangs bared in an evil smile of mischief!! "Hear you're having a party!" he leered. "I just love parties!" And he pushed right past poor Alice, straight into the dining room!

But the little field mouse was right behind him. While her guests screamed in terror, she tapped the mean old wolf on the shoulder. "As long as you're here," she murmured, "how about some tea?" And SPLASH! She poured the whole pot of red-hot tea on Ferdinand's head!

"OW!" screamed the startled, scalded wolf. But before he could duck—SPLATTER! Alice tossed the pitcher of sticky cream straight at him!

By this time, all the ladies had caught the spirit of the thing, and—BIFF! BAM! BANG! All of Alice's soft, squashy pies and pastries went flying—directly into Ferdinand's ugly face!

"Halp! Lemme out of here!" yelped the hapless wolf, racing out of the house as fast as his legs would carry him!

The ladies' victory was complete! And even though they never did get anything to eat... even though they did have to go to work and help Alice the Field Mouse clean up the mess... still, they all agreed it was the most wonderful tea party they'd ever attended!

CASPER, THE FRIENDLY GHOST

DOT presents SAVE-TY FIRST

"Oswald, we've just got to budget our money," Mrs. Beaver was telling her husband.

"You can say that again," agreed Mr. Beaver. "I think we have been spending too much on clothes."

"Yes," said Mrs. Beaver, "you have been spending too much on clothes."

"There are a great deal of things we can cut down," said Mr. Beaver.

"Fine. Perfect," smiled his wife. "Suppose you sit down and work out a budget while I finish this magazine article."

"Huh?"

"Well, the article is about making budgets."

Mr. Beaver got himself a pencil and paper and grudgingly started to work. It seemed that his wife always did the research on problems, and he did all the work. But he had to smile to himself. After all, wasn't it she who found out that an AC radio couldn't work on DC electricity? Maybe she wouldn't do too badly with this budgeting either.

"Oh, Oswald," she now called out.

"Yes," Mr. Beaver answered sweetly.

"Make out a check for five dollars!"

"What?!" he yelped. "I thought we were going to budget our money!"

"Oswald!"

Mr. Beaver fumed as he lifted the pen in his hand. Then he cooled down for a second. After all, she was entitled to one last fling before they got into budget living.

"Oswald," she called again. "Did you write out that check yet?"

"No," he quickly answered. What a woman, he thought. She's changed her mind.

"Then make it out for ten dollars!"

"What?!" he shouted. "Here we're trying to save money by budgeting and you go ahead and spend like you've never spent before! Some help, I'd say!"

Mrs. Beaver didn't say a word. She just looked at her husband with sad, sad eyes.

"Boo hoo!" she cried. "You don't trust me! I wanted ten dollars to get a three-year subscription to this magazine called 'Budgeting Made Easy.' At first, I wanted to try the one-year rate for five dollars. But instead I showed foresight in saving... just like the article said."

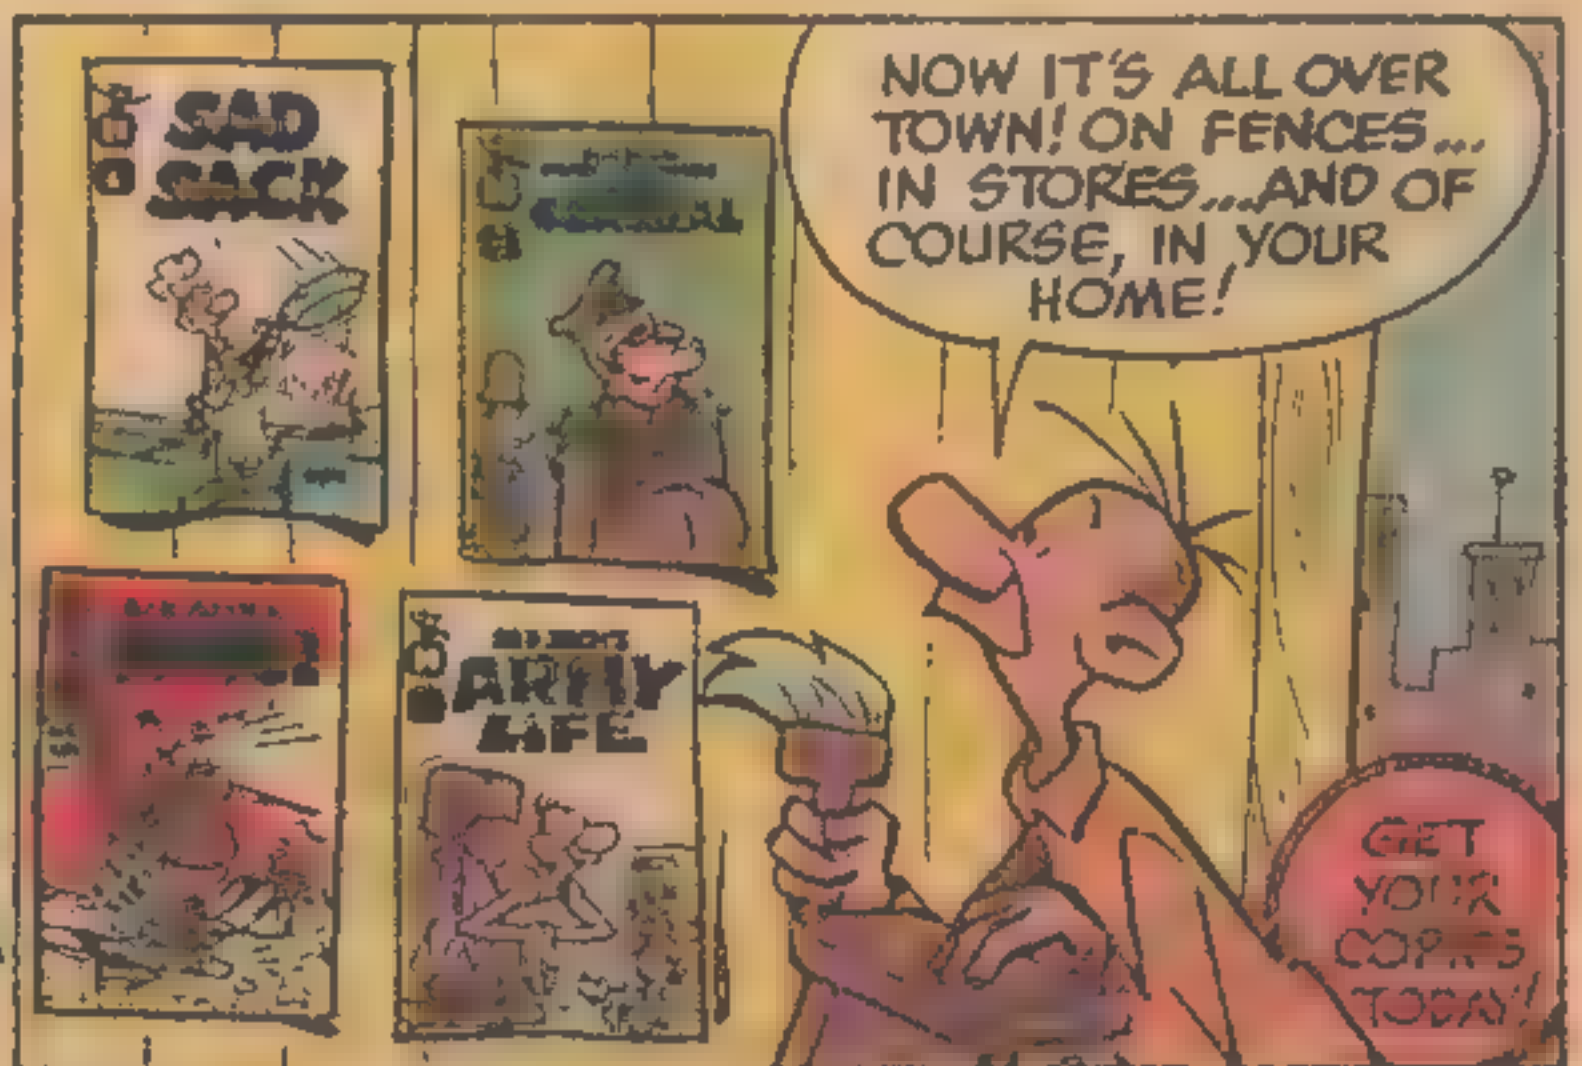

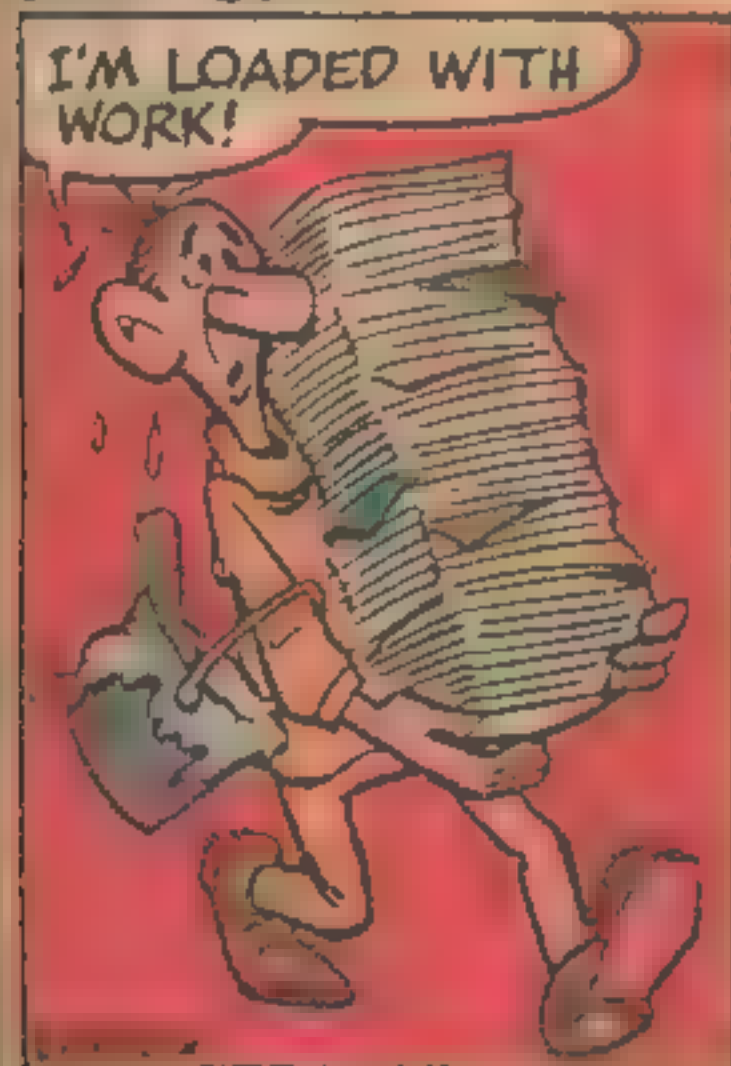

Mr. Beaver was ashamed of himself. He had guessed so wrong. Finally he said:

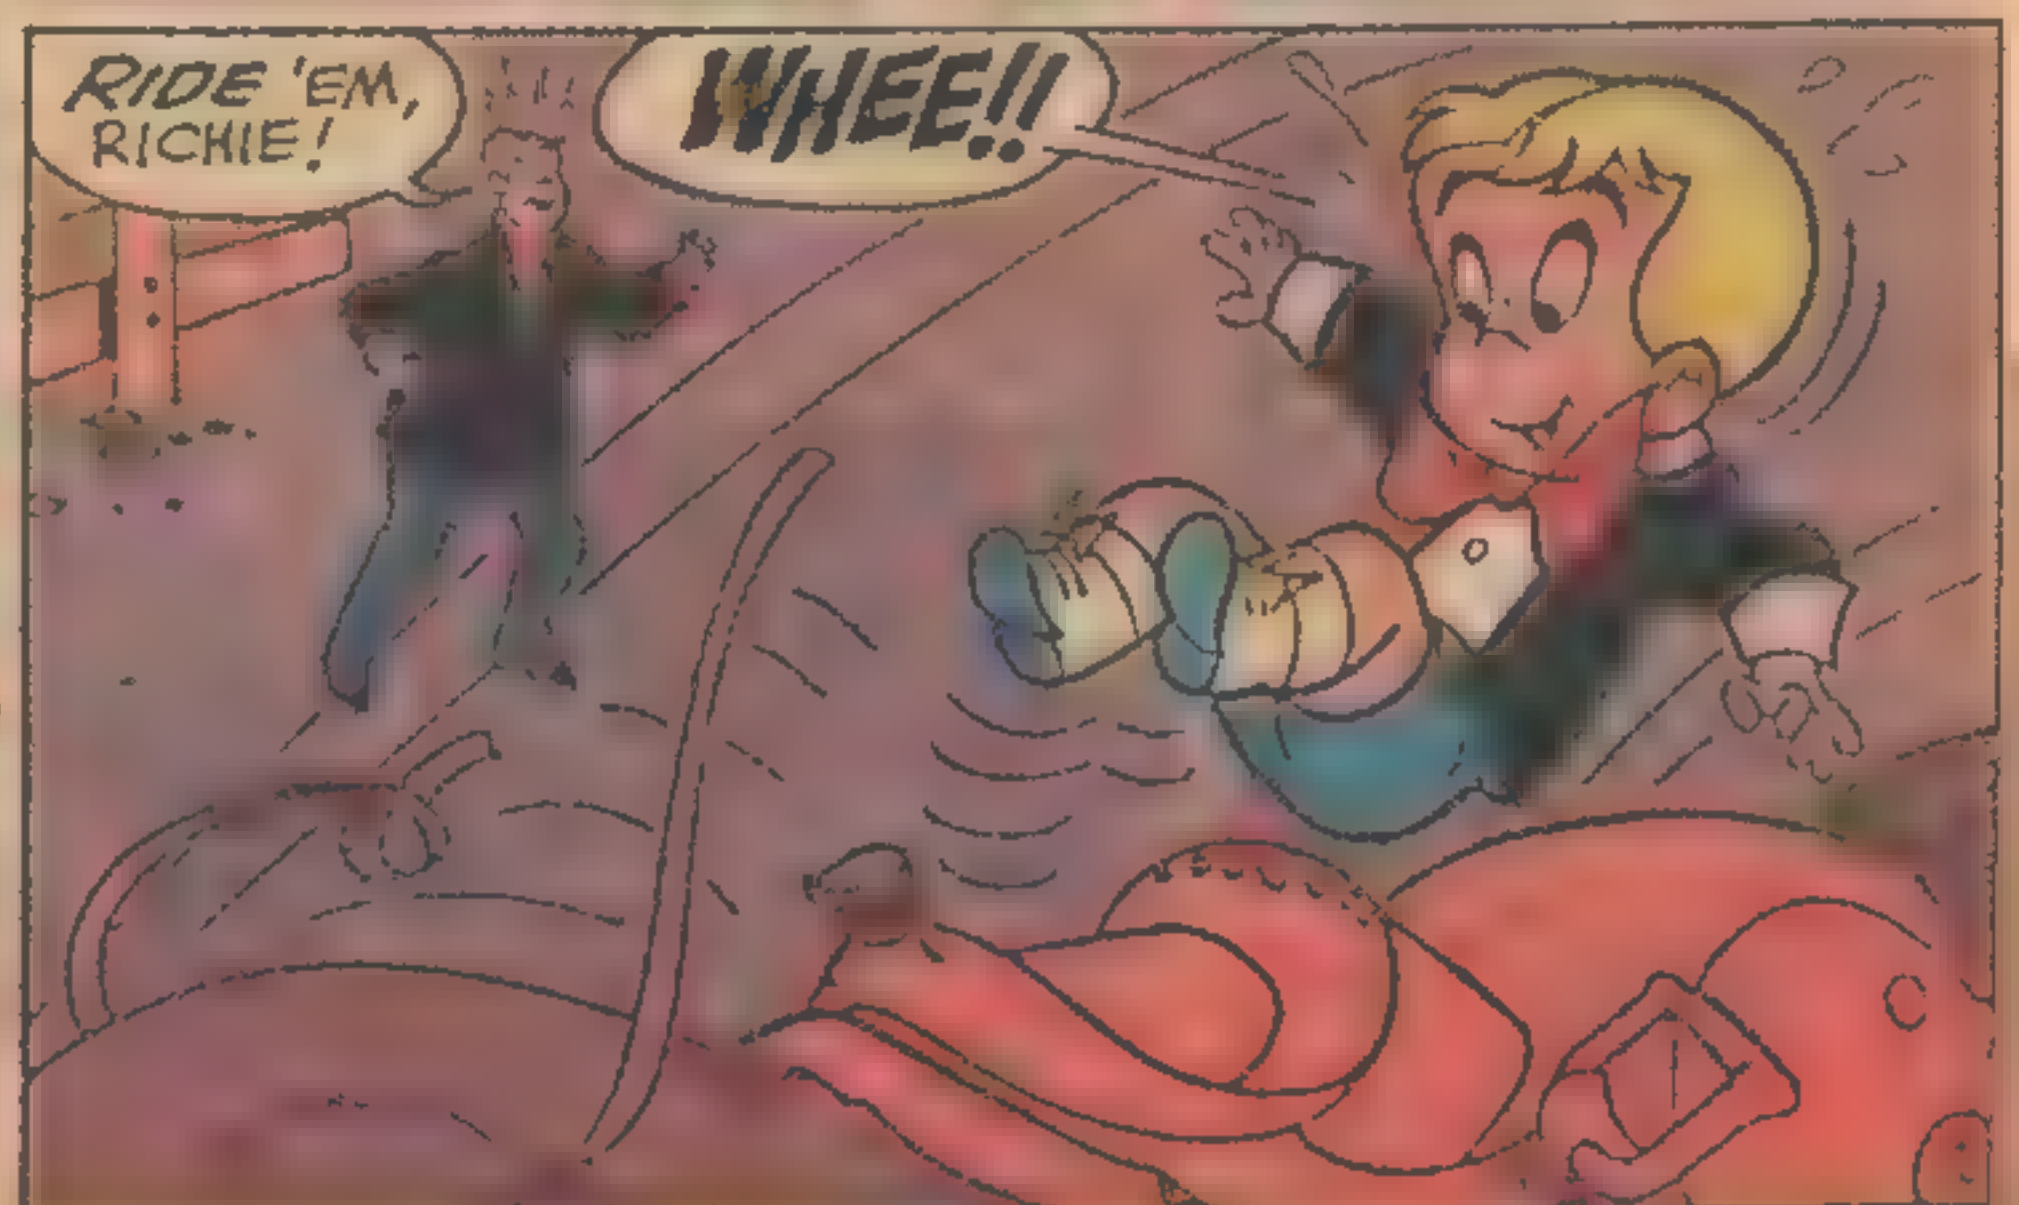

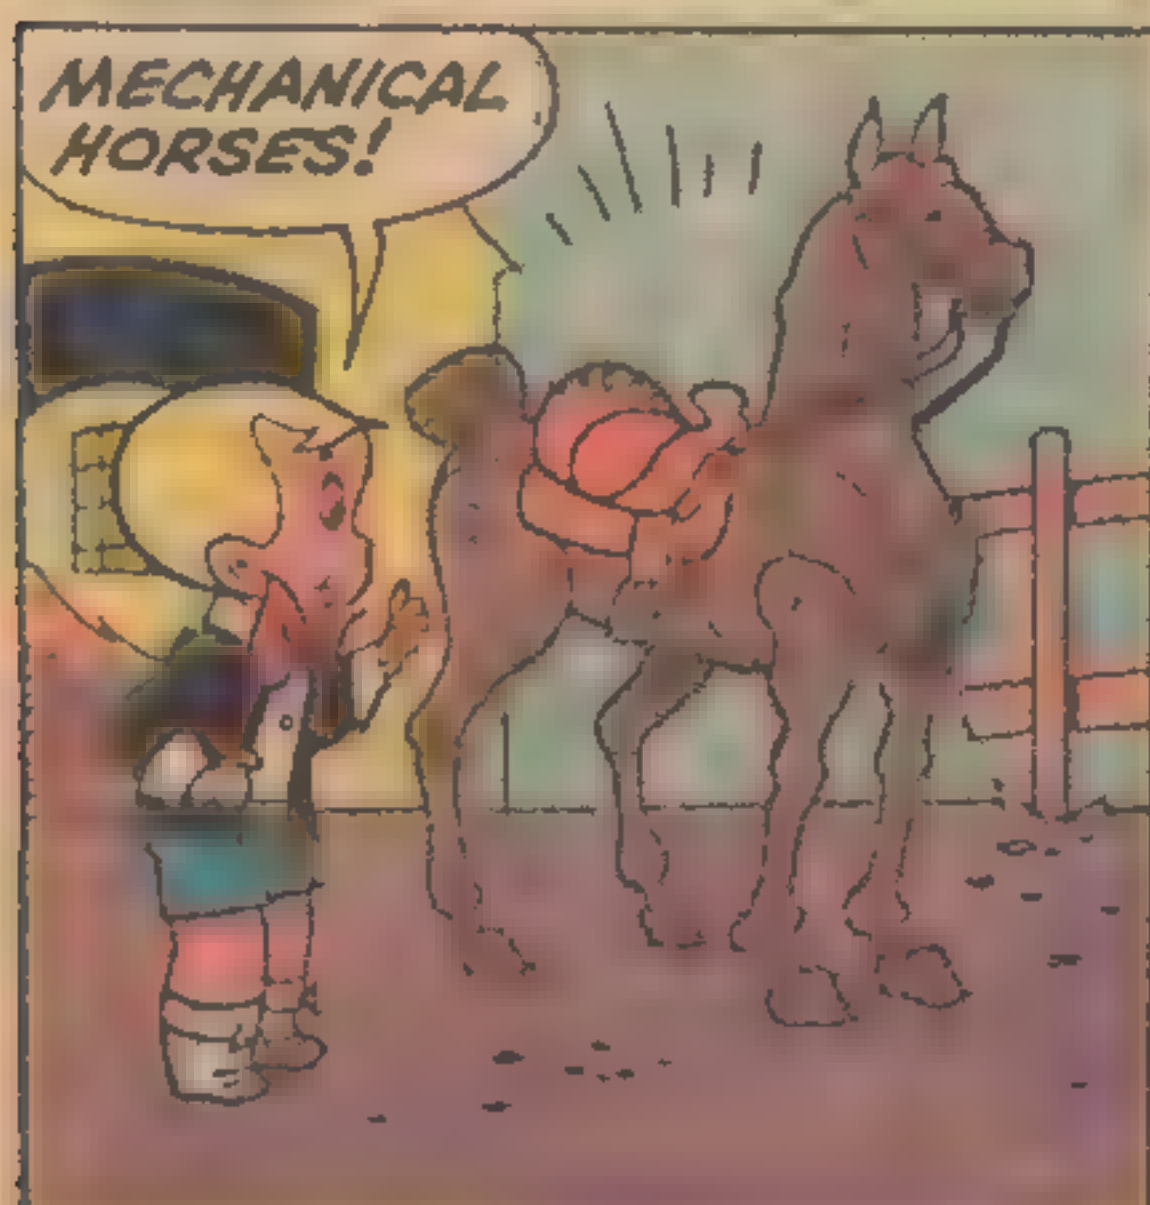

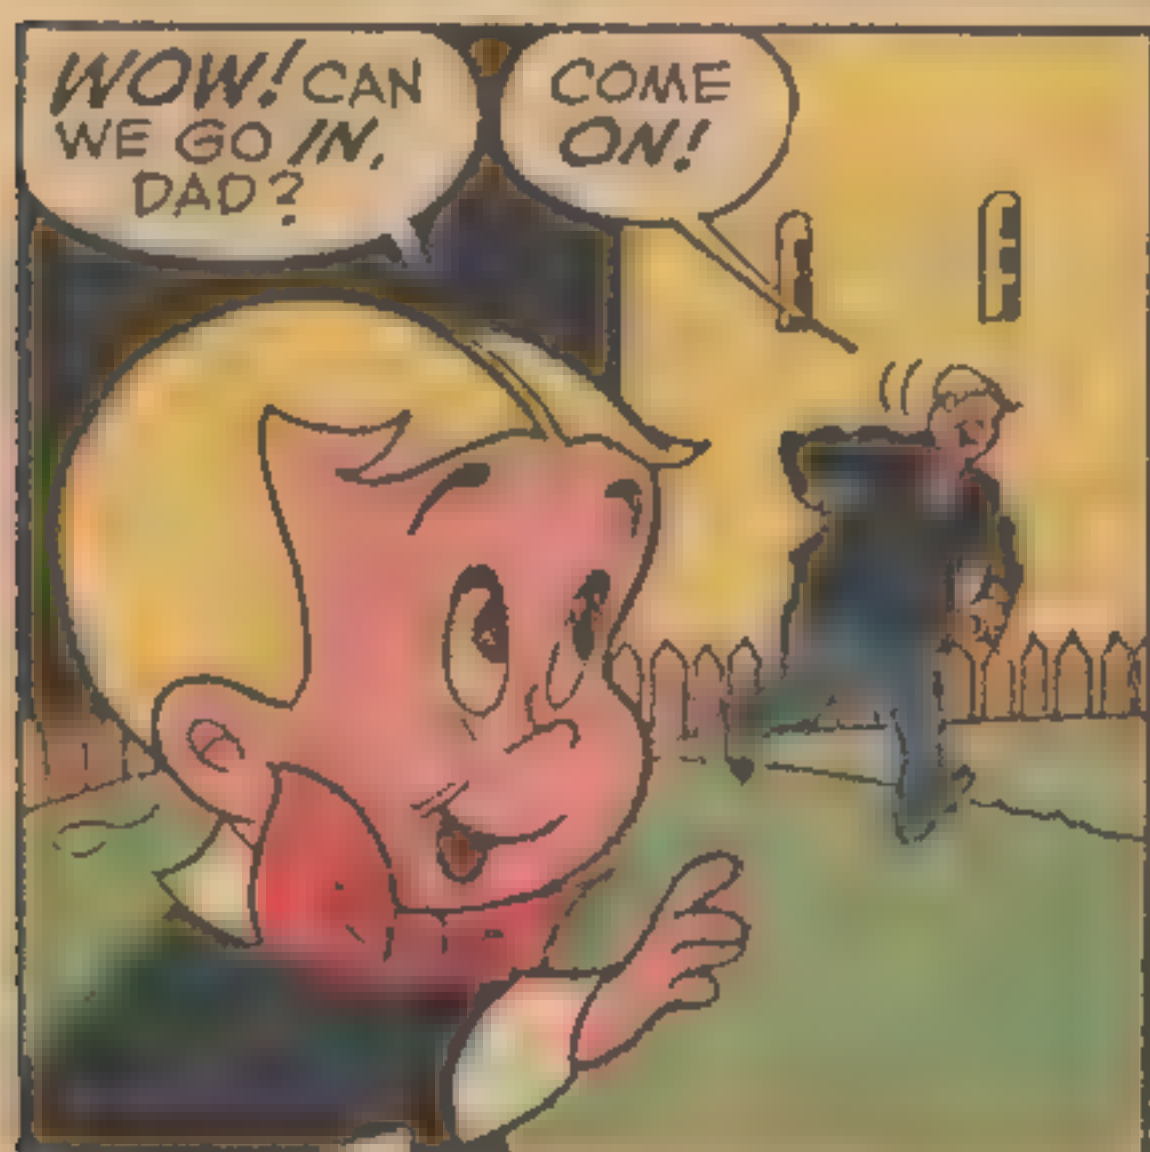

"May I write the check out for twenty dollars? Perhaps we can get seven years at that rate."

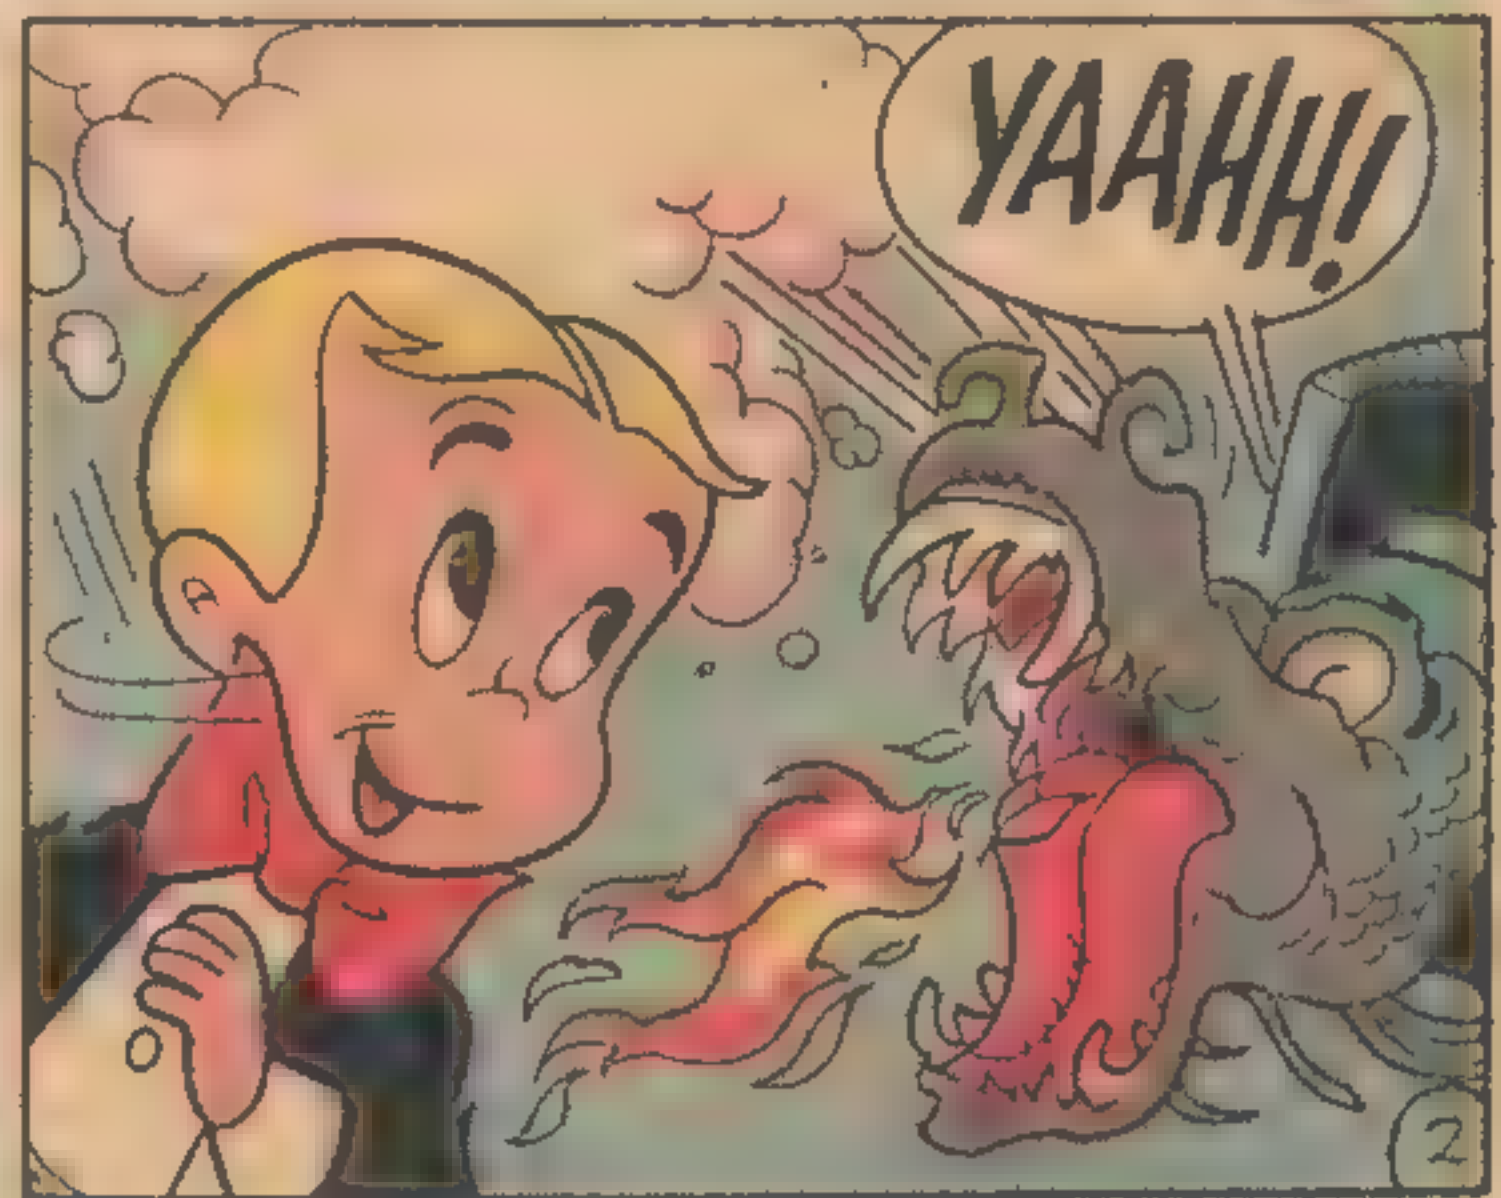

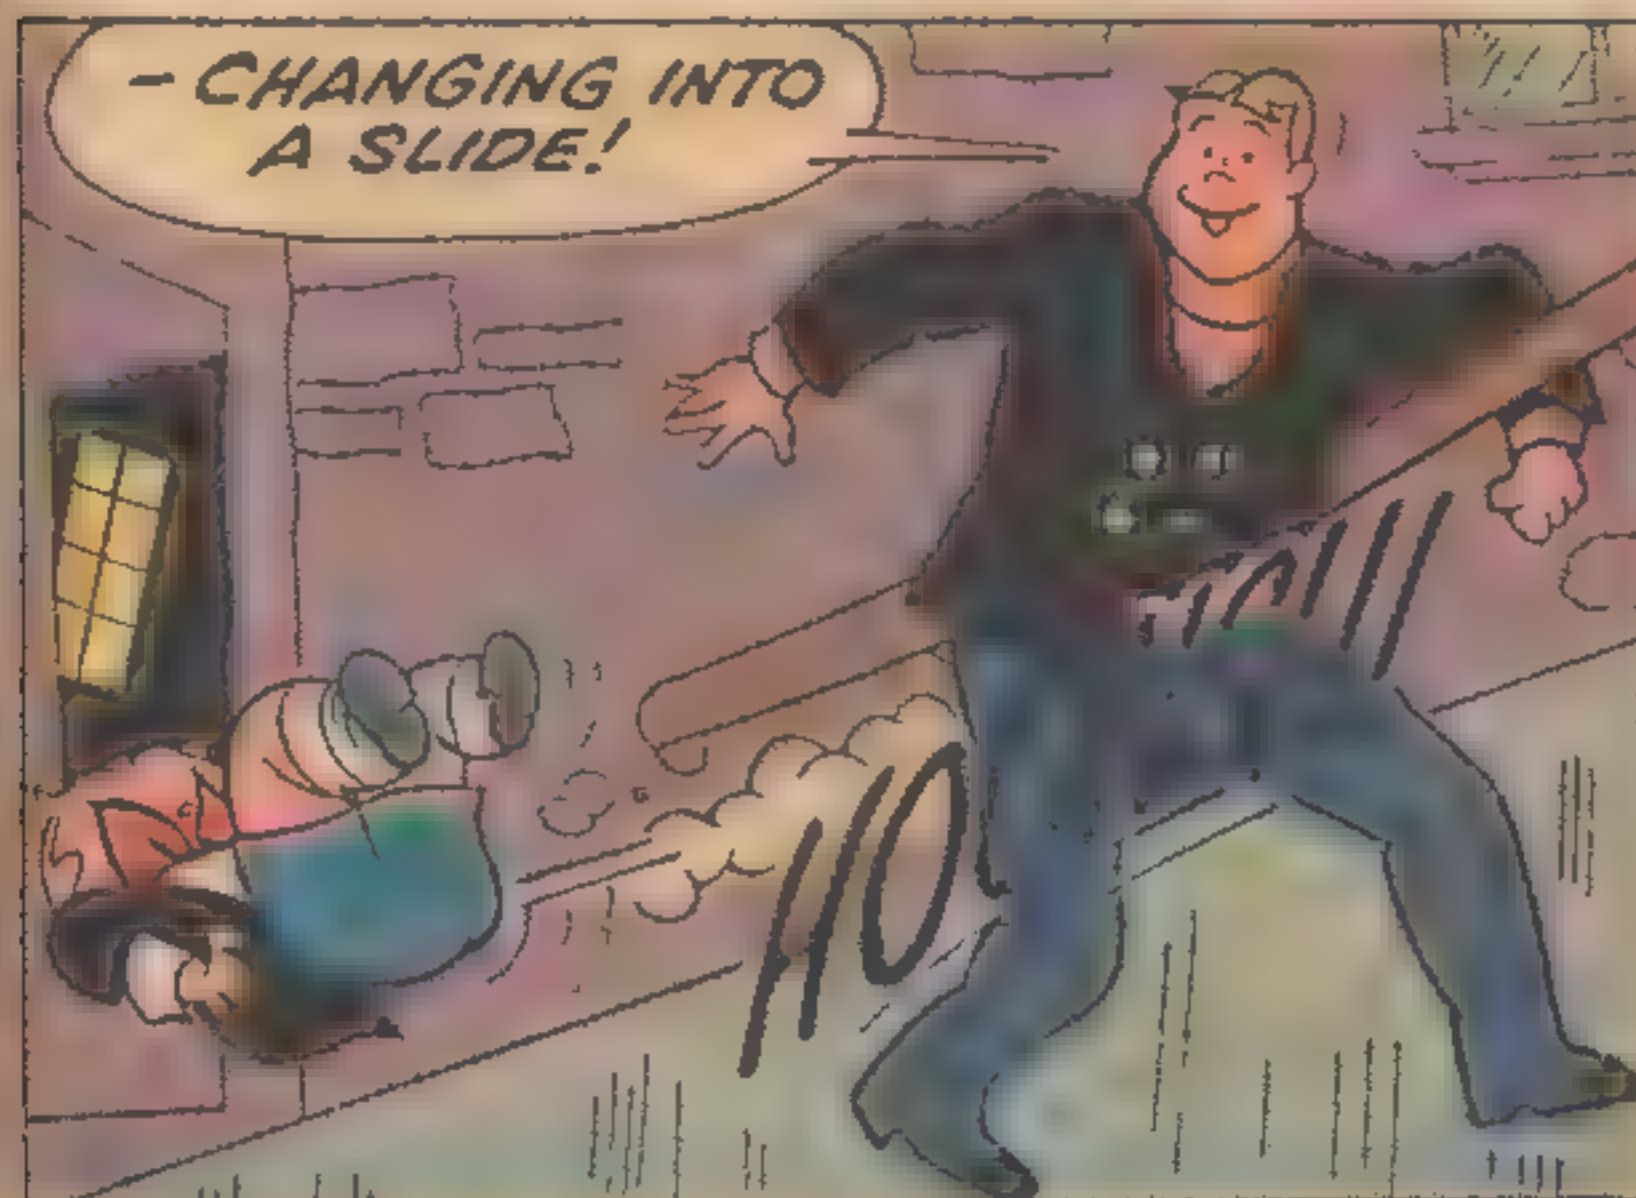

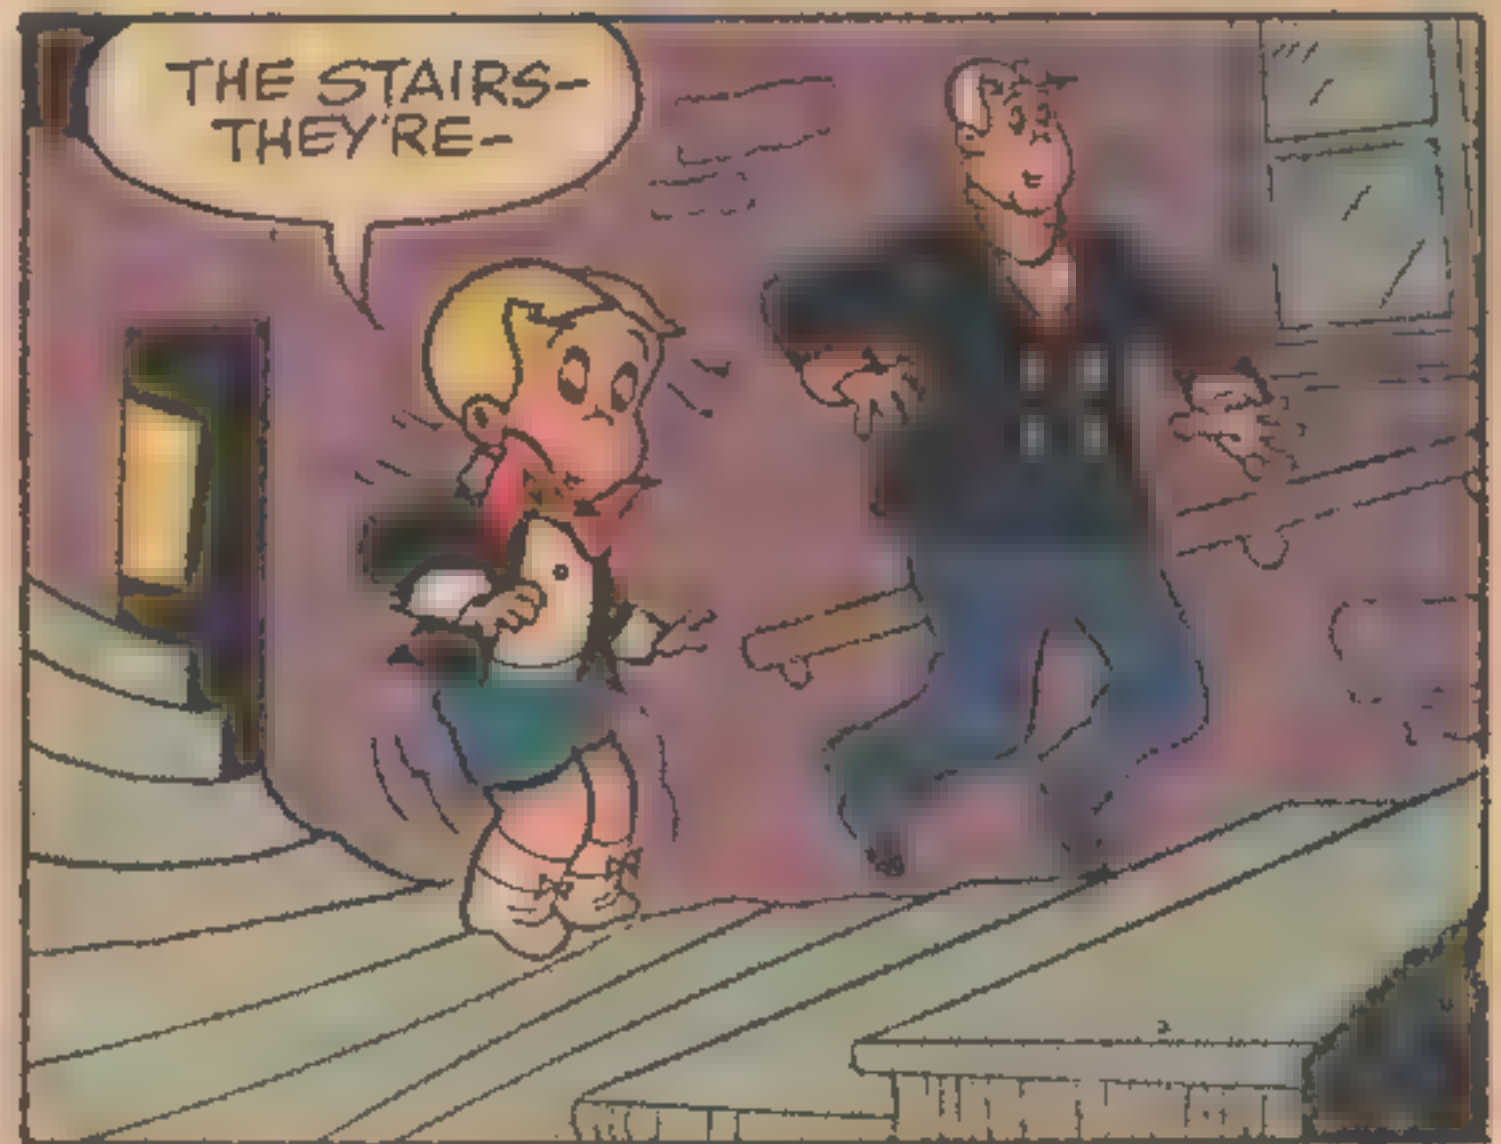

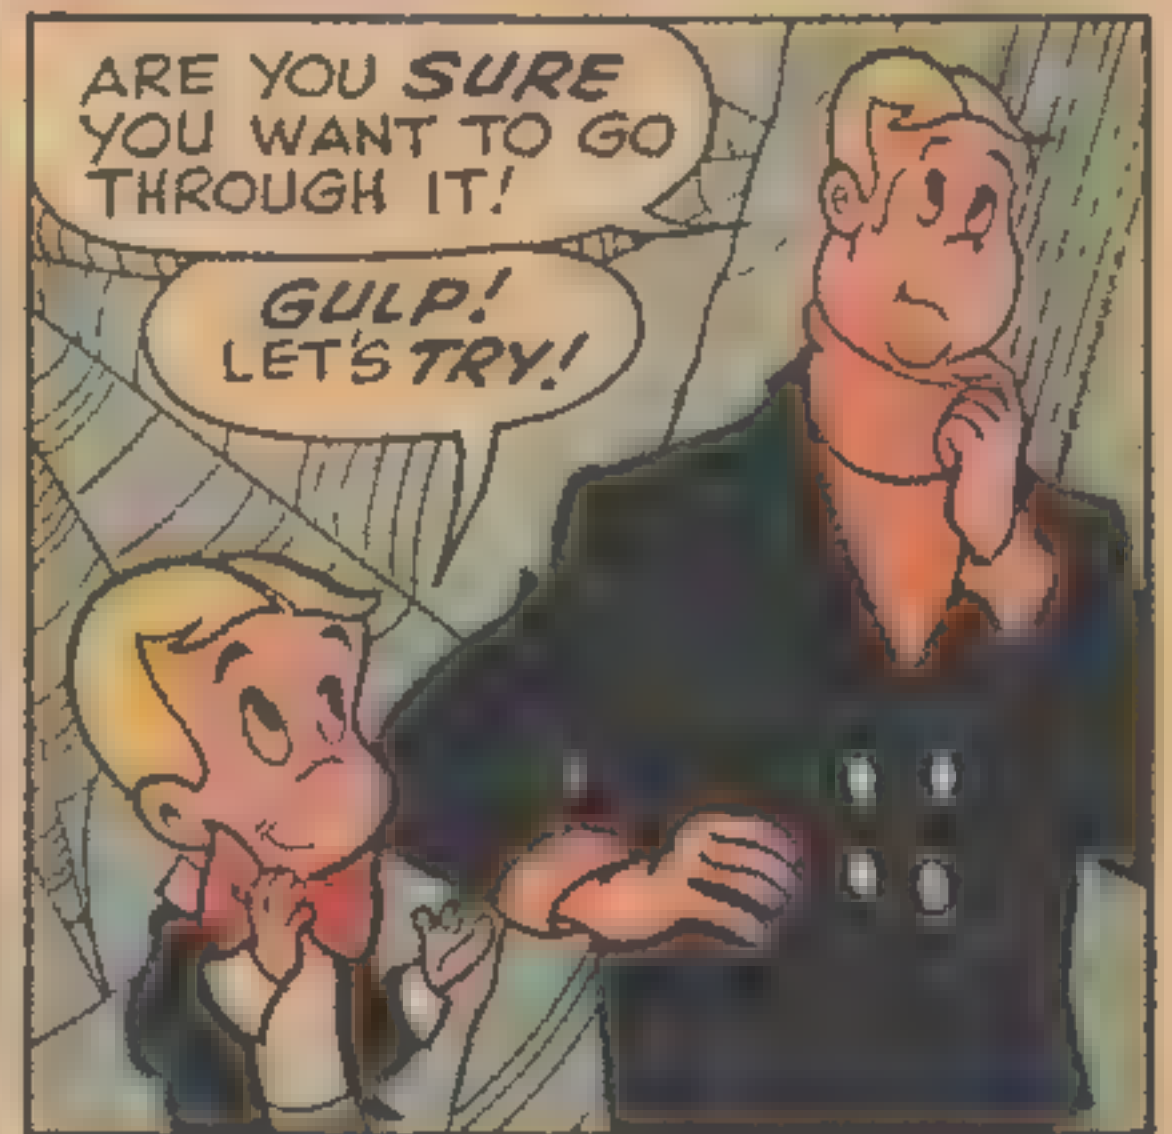

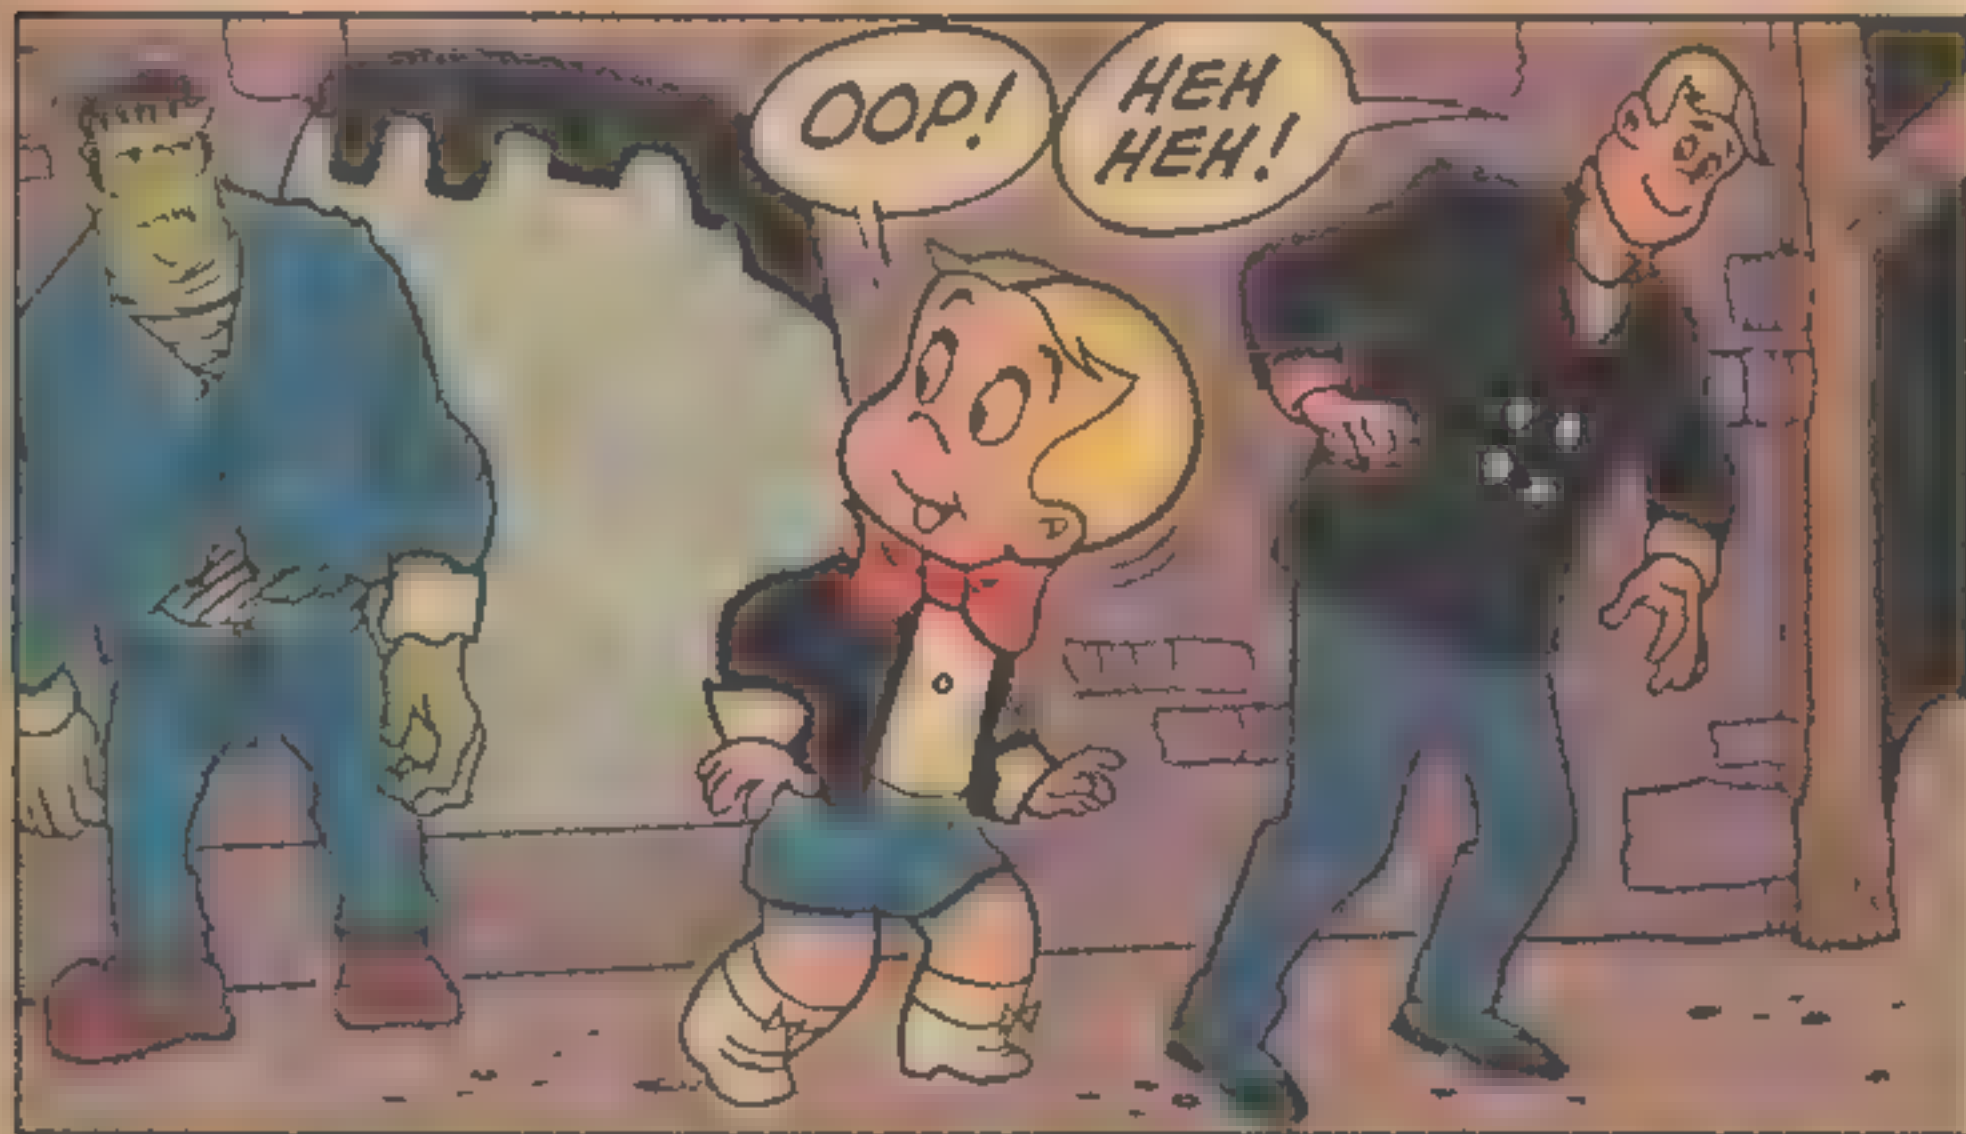

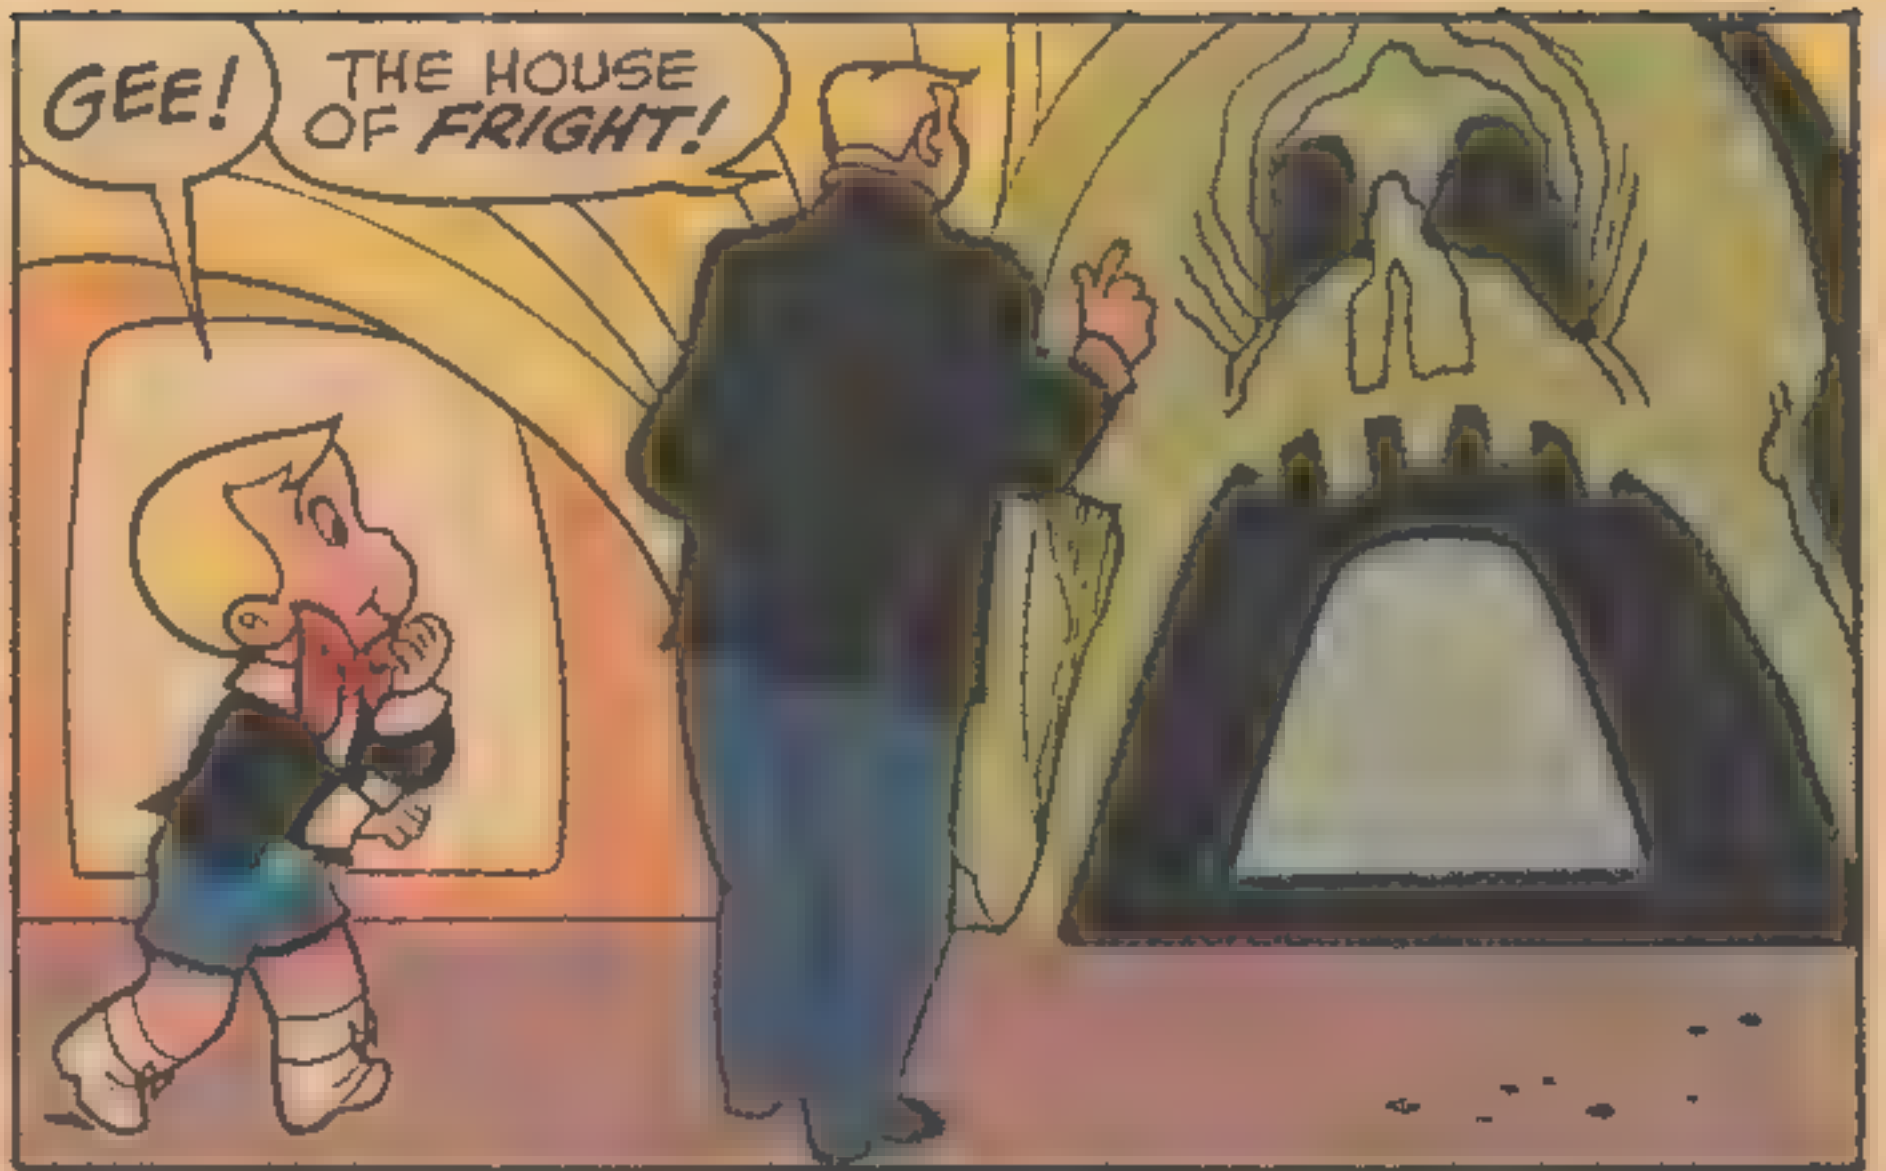

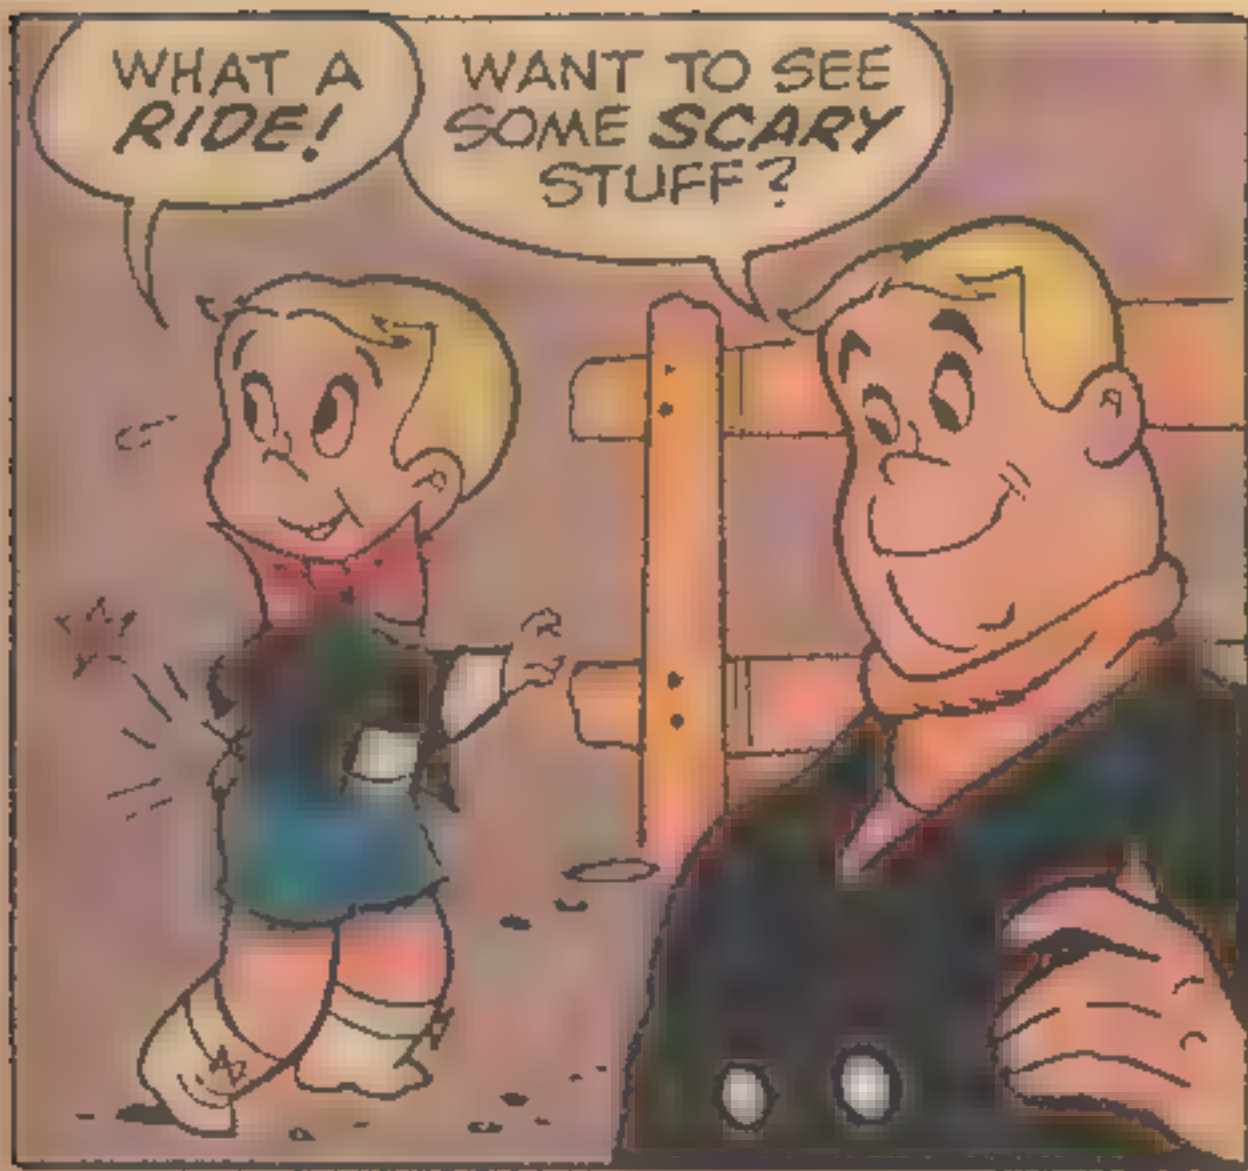

"Oh, no," said Mrs. Beaver, quickly wiping away the tears. "Just make another check out for ten. There's a beautiful hat that's advertised in the magazine."

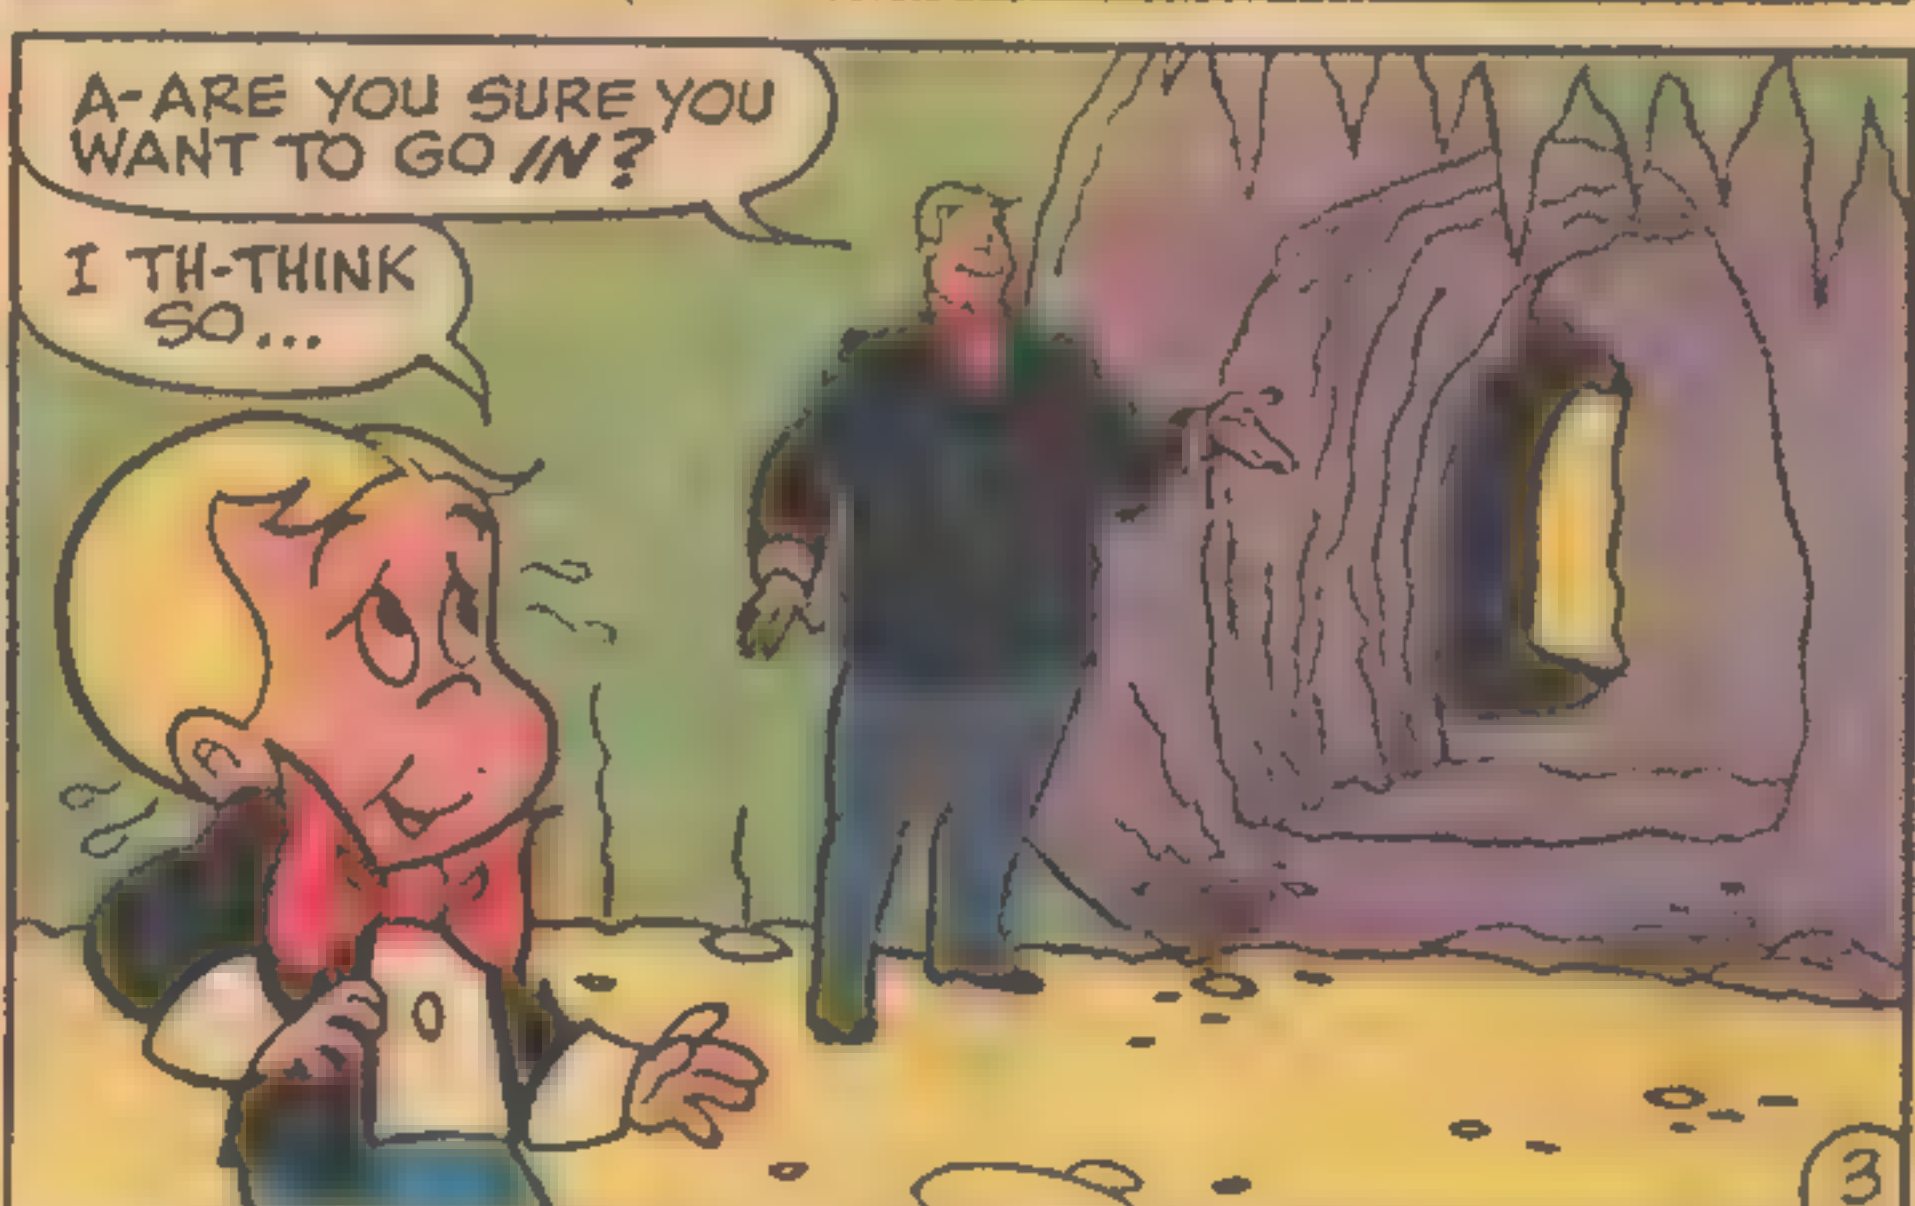

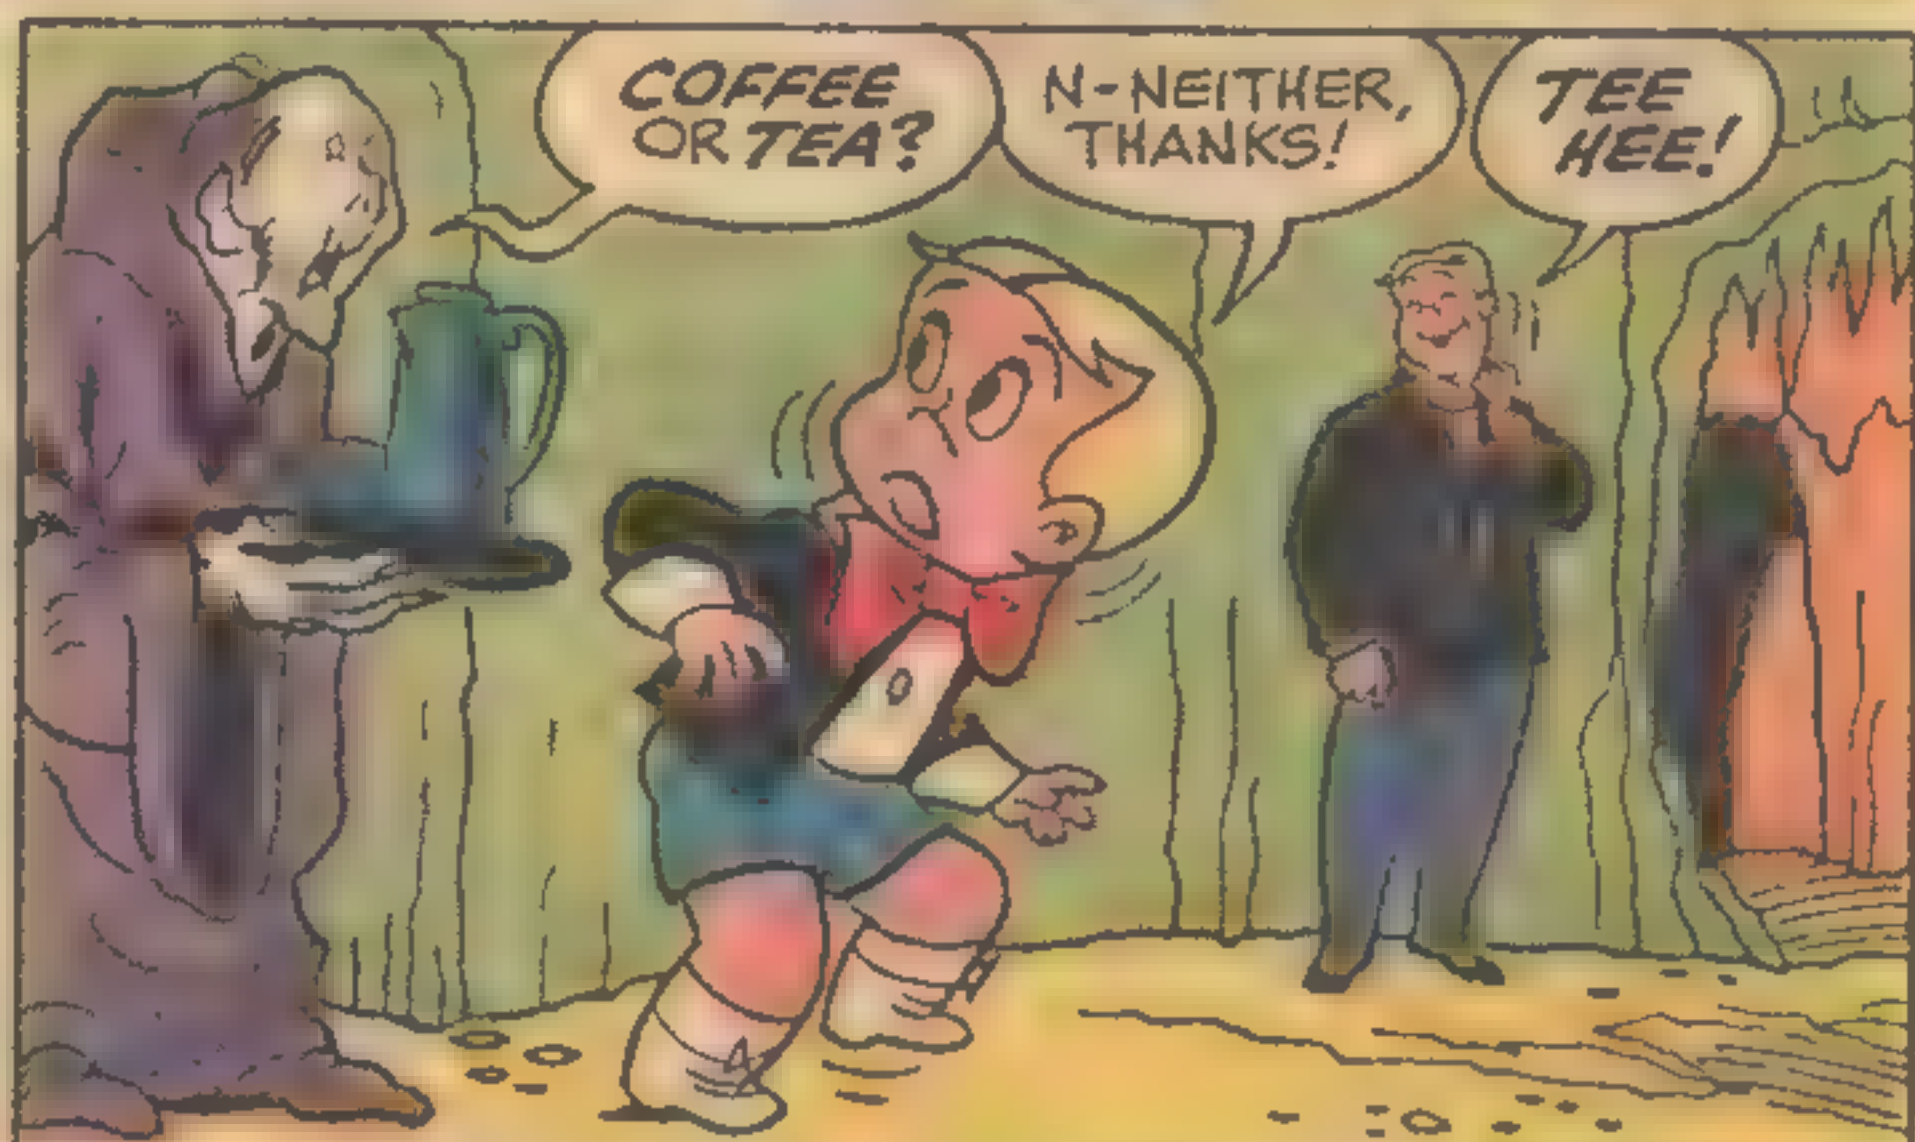

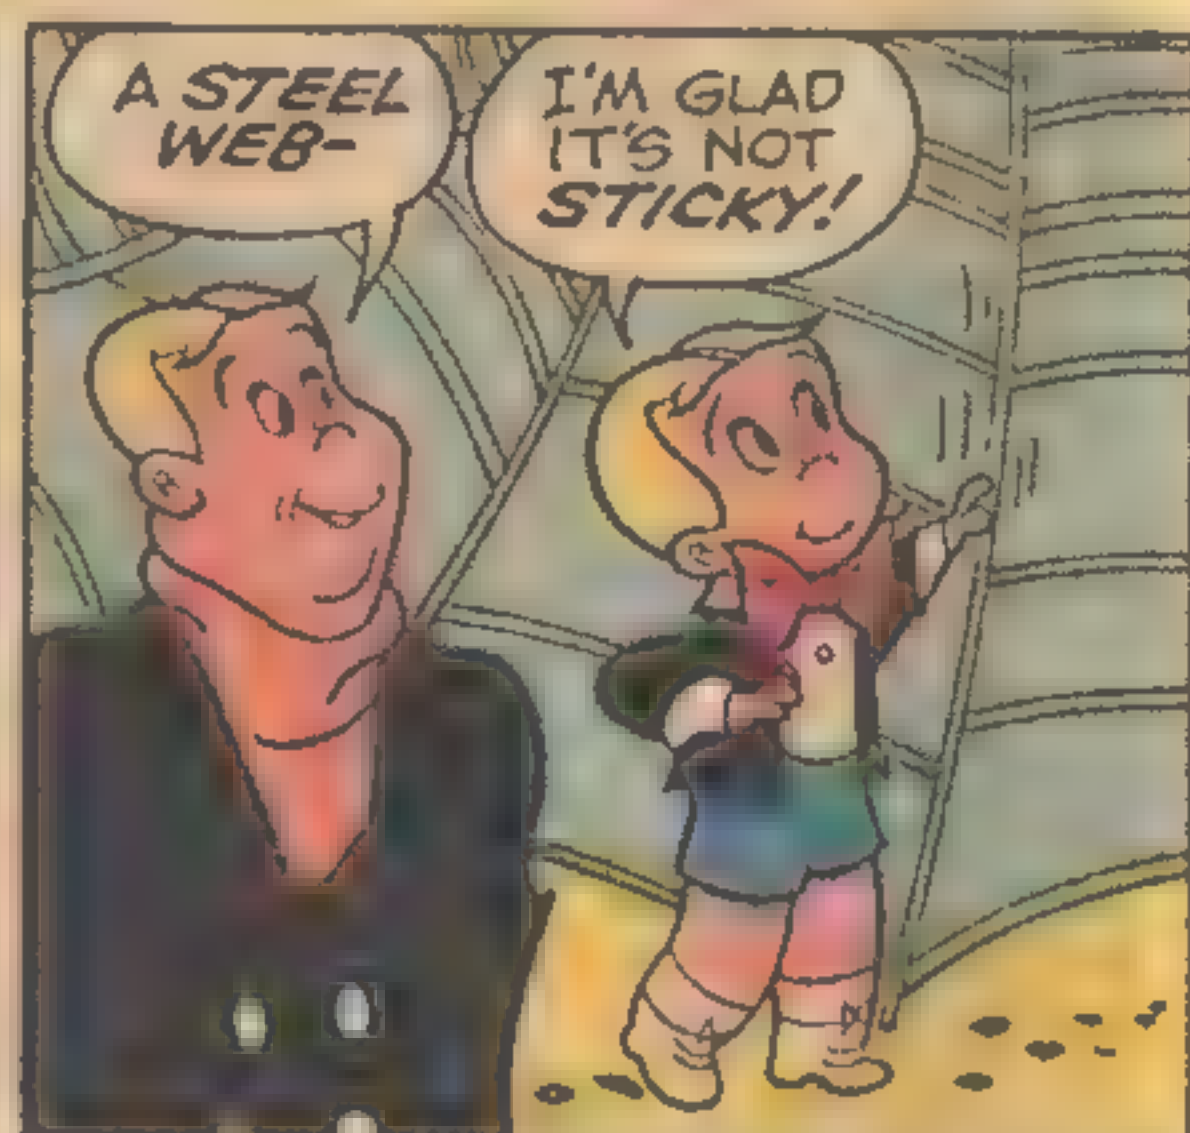

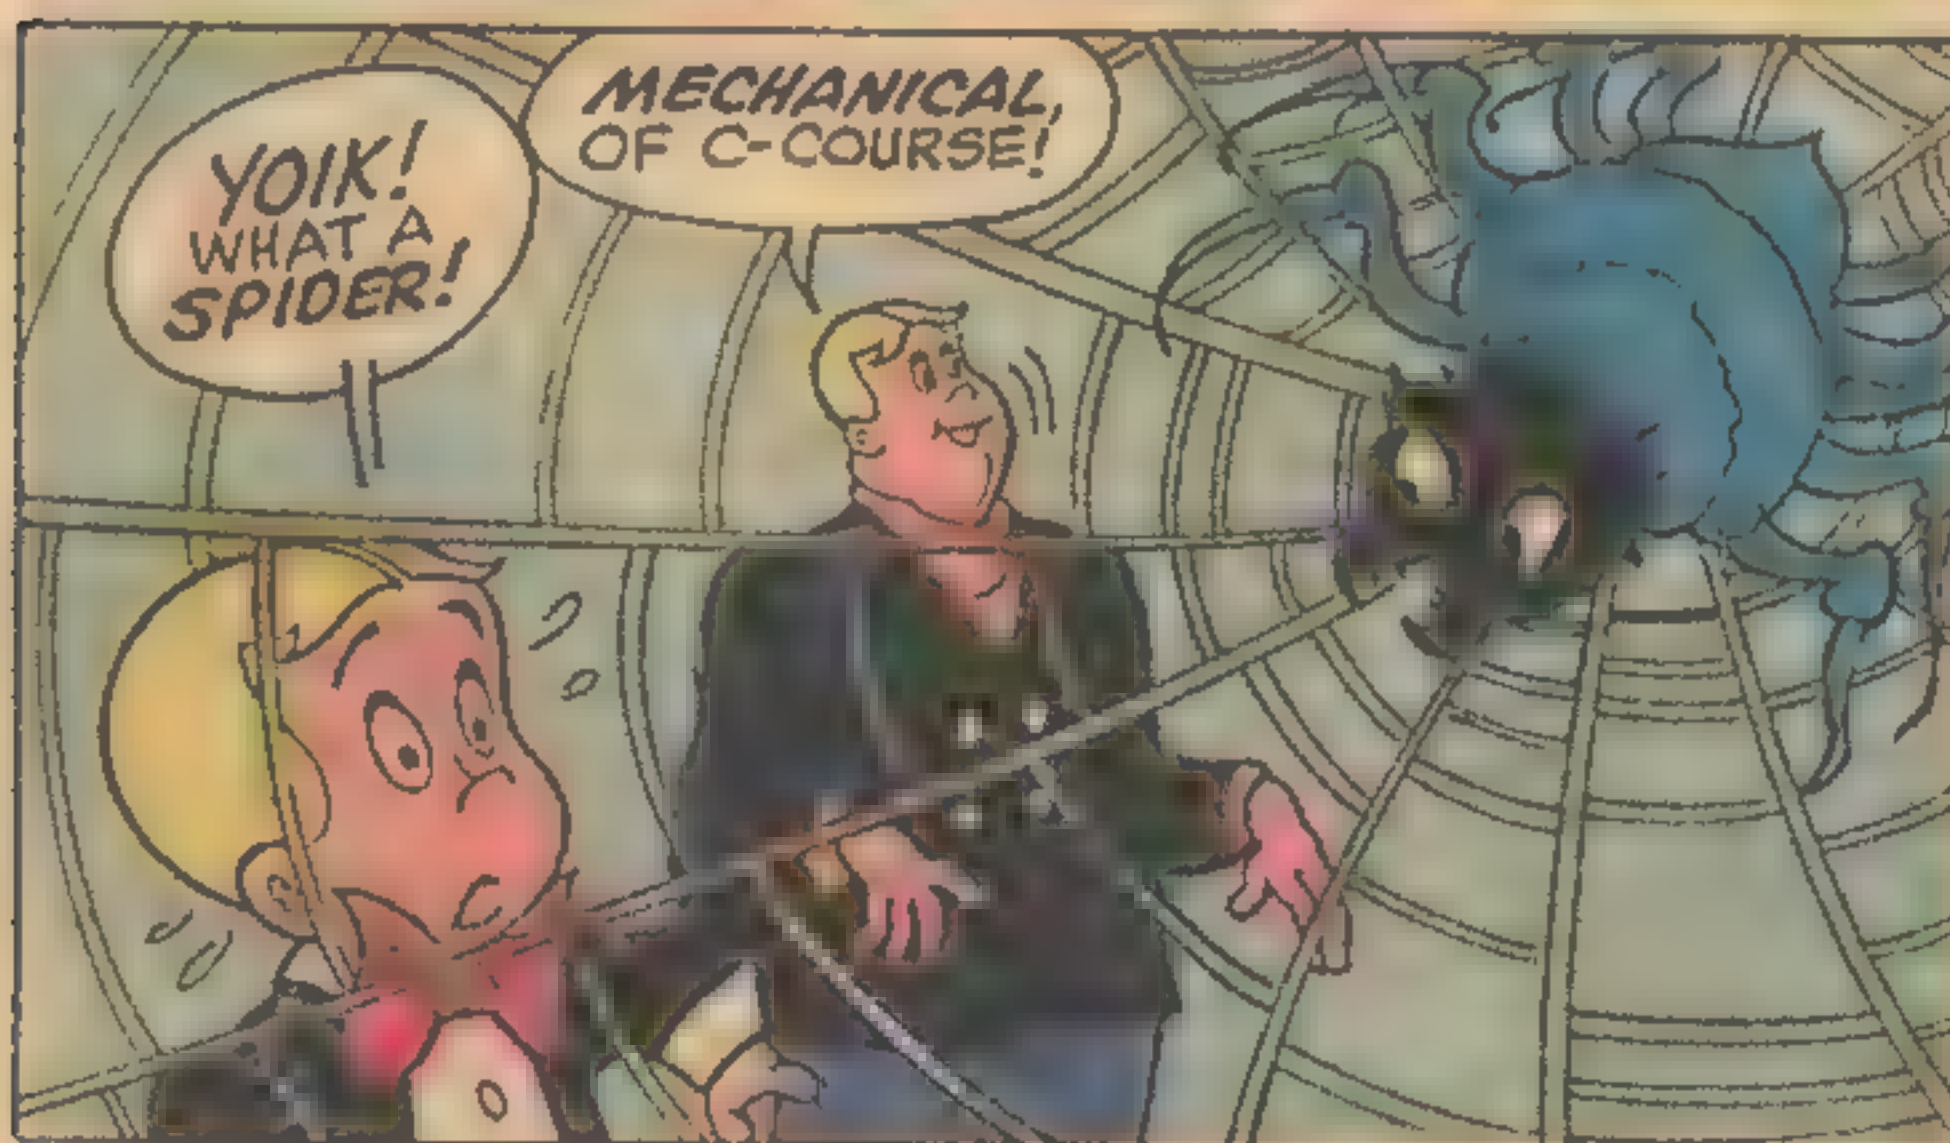

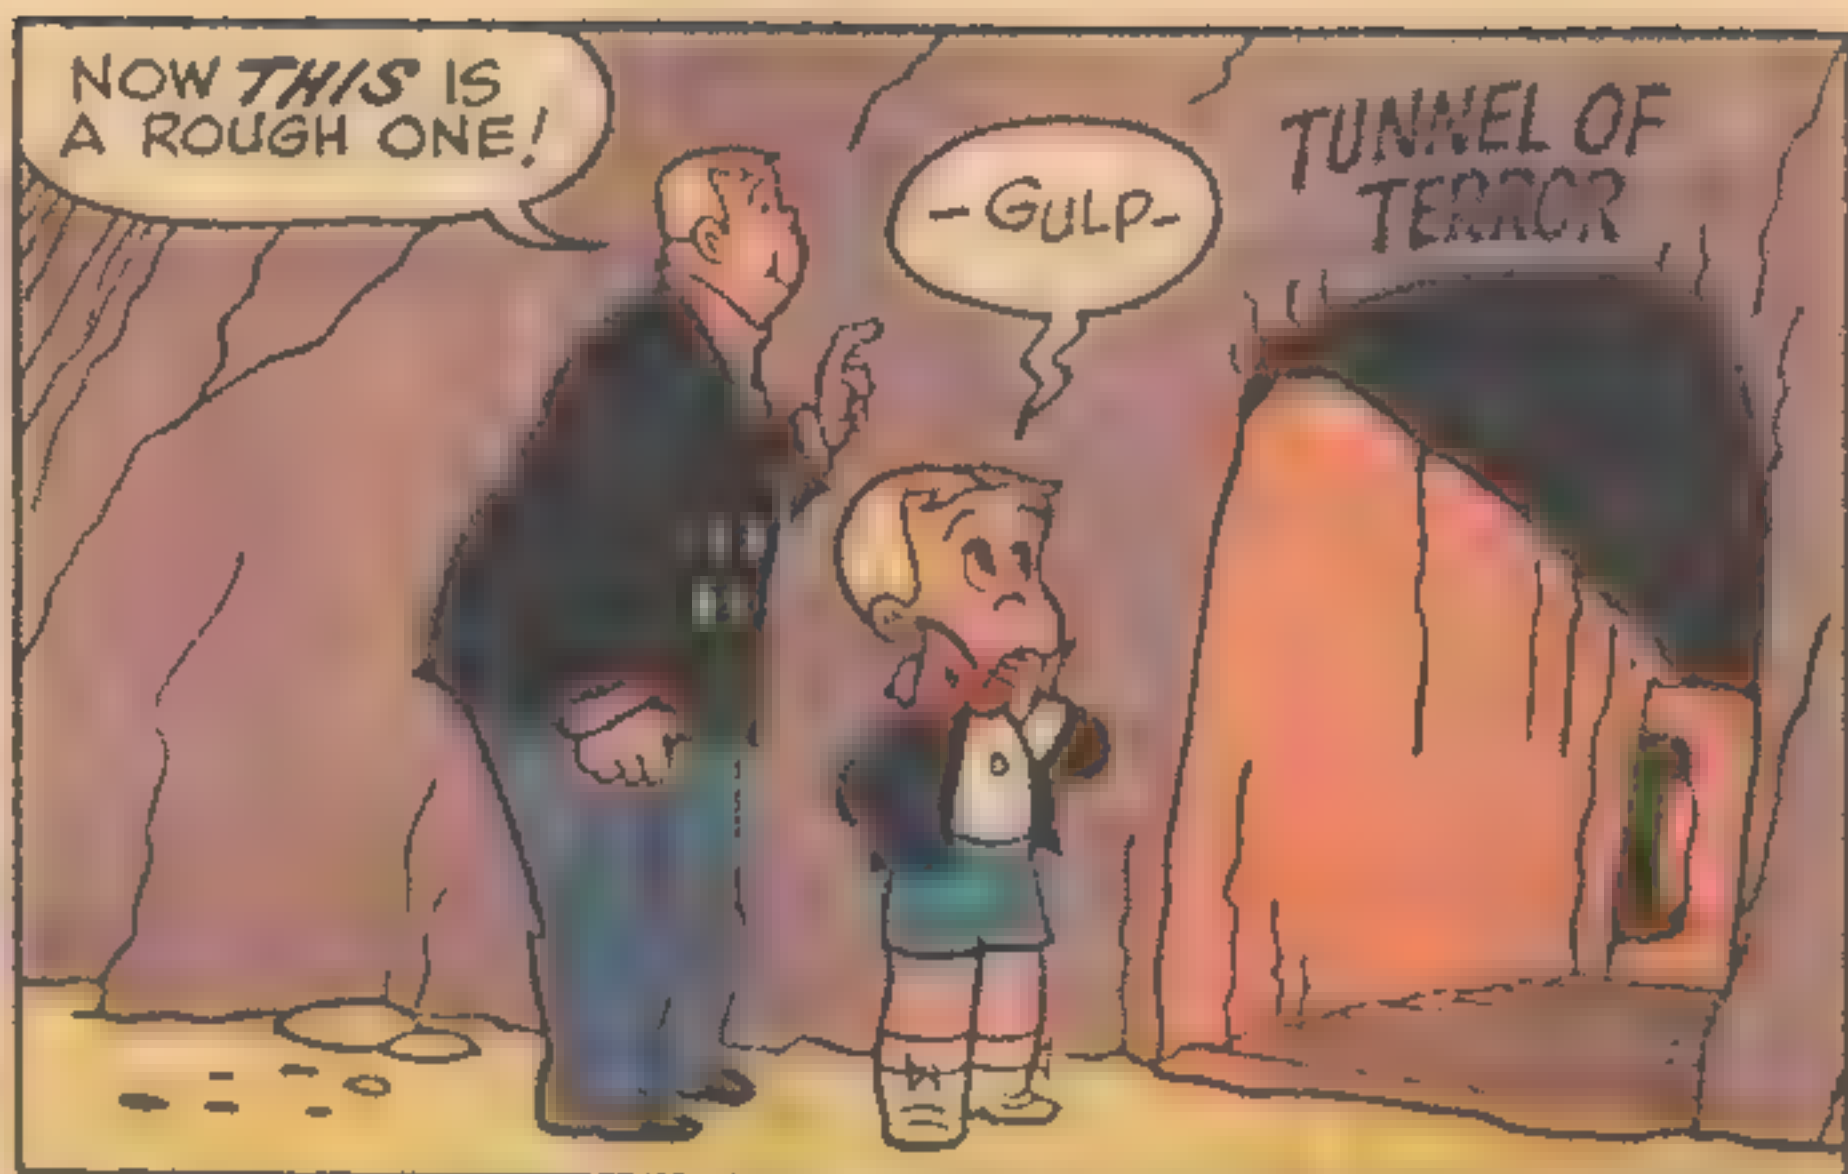

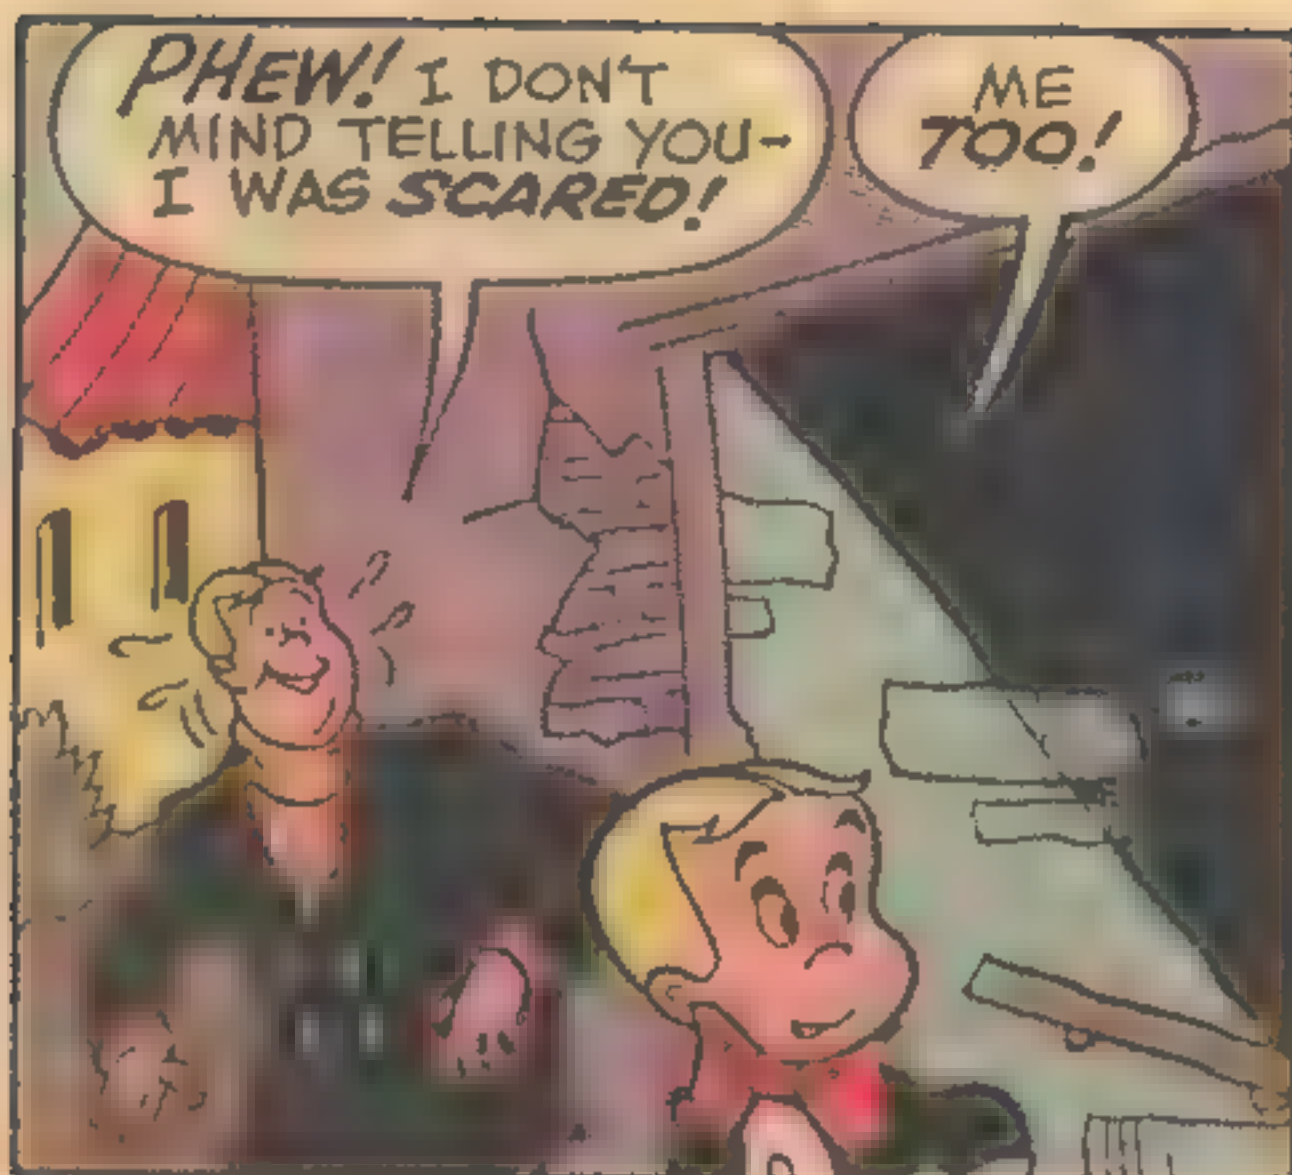

Mr. Beaver just had to walk over and kiss his wife. She didn't make things cheap, but she sure made them fun.
